By the very nature of their craft, designers are involved in the most intimate corners of their clients' lives—their homes. Despite the fulfillment that comes with those relationships, celebrity designer Jennifer Farrell wanted to make a more public declaration of her love for design. She's done this through television, show home experiences and social media. "Over the last 20 years, I've found a special intersection between private home life and public dream life," Farrell says. "I think what I'll be most remembered for are the tattered, forlorn buildings I've transformed into design fantasy, showcase experiences. These signature projects break the mold by presenting my design journey through social media, television, public tours and photo-realistic 3-D shopping experiences. And after their time in the limelight, these special places are handed over to the fortunate new homeowners."

"I hope my legacy is the distinct risks I've taken in my career to create homes that are livable works of art."

THE ULTIMATE DESIGN DREAM

Two decades in design has led Farrell to her most groundbreaking venture. "The Surfaces Showhome at Calibu Vineyard represents the culmination of my design experience," Farrell says. "Part passion project, part social engagement, part virtual experience, part wish-fulfillment, this home is the manifestation of everything that excites me about design." Located on a private vineyard, this property epitomizes innovation and design excellence. While luxury materials and furnishings ground the home in comfort and sophistication, sustainable living and smart features bring the house into the future.

H2 OH!

Perhaps Farrell's favorite space is the wet room. "It's a beautiful glass environment where you can splash your way from a big tub to a spacious shower area without worry. Let's please keep this trend," she quips.
